Knitters, friends, I may have fallen in love with this sweater. The cables are lush, the neckline is graceful and pretty, the asymmetry is adorable, the sleeve length is lovely, and the shaping keeps it sleek. Not that it's a surprise that Fiona Ellis does such wonderful work with cables (um, hello. This? Remember this? And this??). Take a look, just to refresh your memory about how we saw this one in the pages of Twist.

First up in the styling roster- a set of casual looks featuring this darling top. You might be able to tell that the one on the right is my favourite. If you wanted to take that look to a full-on 50s kitch place, tie a small square scarf around your throat, and add sheer ankle socks. Feel free to chuckle at my ability to turn the volume on neutral color pallettes up to eleven.

This sweater can also definitely read dressy if you want it to! A three quarter sleeve pretty much begs for bangles and rings, don't you think?

I stuck with pearly tones and graphic patterns, but the truth is that you could wear this sweater with almost anything and it would look smashing. How would you wear your Breckenridge?
