I'm having a little lovefest with cables these days. I'm going to tell you more about it next week, because I just finished an extremely cable-ful Twist project that I can't wait to share with you all! I used to be so afraid of those windy stitches, but once you get the hang of cabling (especially withough a cable needle! It's so fun!), it's pretty simple, and creates amazing fabric. The effort to impact ratio is truly excellent.

This gorgeous cardigan is for more of a cable minimalist, but the impact of those few twirly tendrils is just stunning. Don't you think so?

It's pretty darn perfect with jeans. I don't even wear pants and I still want to be wearing that exact outfit pretty much now. I love the high neckline and the extended ribbing on the sleeve. The shape is easy, but not messy. I think you could dress this lots of different ways.

Here are a couple I cooked up for you:

I definitely want to know how you would wear Aleph, and I also want to know what color you would knit it in!

Let's take one more look at this garment, because it's so nice, and also because I love this photo. Laughter is gorgeous. I hope you all laugh this weekend!
